

Consent Form

Personal Resiliency Index

This consent form is for your participation in web-based online survey for creating a Personal Resiliency Index, which helps the user understand their level of resilience to natural and man-made disasters and what actions can be taken to improve their posture. This is a research project led by Dr. Ron Fisher at the Idaho National Laboratory (INL). It should take approximately 5-10 minutes to complete.

- Participation in the survey is voluntary.
 - You may exit the survey anytime without any penalty
 - You may choose to not answer any question
- You will not receive any monetary benefits from your participation. However, your participation will help to identify the areas where participants are excelling as well as opportunities for improvement in terms of personal resilience to natural and man-made disasters.
- There are no foreseeable risks to participating in this study
No Personal Identifiable Information such as your name or IP address is being collected through the survey. Therefore, your answers will remain anonymous. The user response will include age, gender, state of residence in the United States in addition to the survey responses.
- The data will be encrypted and stored in accordance with Amazon Relational Database Services encryption procedures.
- If you have any questions about the study, you may contact Richa Sabharwall at richa.sabharwall@inl.gov
